

You know now.

The cook with the ladle. The man who tested you, trusted you, and sent you into the castle. Jordan is Hans von Baysen – the chairman of the Council, the man you were carrying this letter to all along.

The eighth bell is close.

---

MESENTERS,

Tonight ends at the castle. Go to the ruins at PRZEDZAMCZE – what remains of the Teutonic fortress. Be there at the EIGHTH BELL. You will not be alone.

The letter you have been carrying all day. You still have not read it. You still do not know what it says.

At the ruins, you will find two sides:

- ON THE LEFT – the chairman of the Council. The man who has been Jordan all along.
- ON THE RIGHT – the Komtur, Albrecht. The Order's man in Thorn.

WALK TO ONE OF THEM. PLACE THE LETTER IN THEIR HANDS.

That is the last thing we ask.

–J.

This is what you have been carrying. This is where it ends.

The pipes have gone quiet. The carnival is burning itself out, the masks coming off all over the city — and yours with them. No more faces to wear. Just you, and the choice.

The sealed letter — in the bag since this morning, unread, unbroken. And it will stay that way. Whatever words are folded inside it, you will never know them. You were only ever the hands that carried it; tonight you are the hands that hand it on.

The eighth bell. The ruins. A choice.

You walk.