

I cannot be there. It is too dangerous now — and the thing was never mine to keep. I was only ever to carry it a little of the way.

So now it falls to you. Whatever you were to put into my hands, you will put into his: the head of their Council — their chairman — into his own hand, and no other's. Find the way to him.

When the marks send you to the door, you will not know our man on sight. So speak his name, and tell him what he bought this morning — that is the word we set for today, and by it he will know you came from me.

Go carefully. — R.
